

🍷 Geographic Divisions of the SCA 🍷

The SCA is organized as a number of regional chapters, each of which has its own internal subgroups.

This diagram shows the most common group types, but for historical reasons there are also lots of exceptions.

Every group has a local set of officers; gold crowns mark the groups which are also led by titular nobles.

The Society is governed by a Board of Directors along with a panoply of corporate and society officers.

The twenty kingdoms of the known world are the primary organizing units of the Society. Their royals are selected by tournament, typically with six-month reigns.

Some kingdoms include one or more principalities, while others are divided into administrative regions, but neither is required, and most kingdoms don't use either.

Most organizing of events and activities happens at the local level, in baronies, provinces, and shires. Baronies have nobles with multi-year terms, but provinces don't; shires are smaller and can't have sub-chapters.

Some local groups include smaller subchapters for a specific community.
